With all its awkward and limping makeshifts "Siegfried" remains the great operatic embodiment of youth, enthusiasm and adventure. It is the spring song of all Wagner's lyric creations, and of the ponderous tetralogy it is perhaps the most genial member. If keen analysts are right in pointing out that the great third act has not the spontaneity of the first and second, its massive eloquence is none the less irresistible. Poor Wagner! The medy of the Crescent Athletic Club will be given next Saturday afternoon and ing in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn. After the show the members will entertain their guests at the town house.

The entertainment will open with an old fashioned minstrel show in which there will be a chorus of sixty. W. J. McCahill will be interlocutor and the end men will be Oakiey Wood, George Hewlett, E. K. Butler and James A. Dunne. Songs will be sung by John Barnes Wells, George W. Head, , and William Simmons. The songs and choruses are all new, the words having been written by Lawrence A. Riley and the music by Alfred J. Doyle.
